

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"There are plenty of counterfeit silver dollars," remarks an exchange. That is a lie. There are not plenty of silver dollars of any sort.

The policemen in Des Moines, Iowa, are keeping watch this Summer to see if they can find a baldheaded tramp. No baldheads up to date.

The resignation of Mr. Erhart, Collector of the Port of New York, and the appointment of J. S. Fassett, as his successor, has stirred up the politicians in the East wonderfully.

Two women tramps were in Winnemucca the other day and kept the boys on the move keeping out of their way. They got enough money to pay their fare to Battle Mountain and left for that place. The boys then came out of their hiding places.

That the lumbermen of the Mississippi Valley are well pleased with the future of the Pacific Coast is indicated by a transaction of more than ordinary magnitude just closed by them whereby they have come in possession of about one million acres of land in Oregon.

The Western Virginian who recently sent out the harrowing tale of the horrible murder of the Brumfield family in Wayne county by Italians ought to be sent up for life, since it has been established that every word of the story is false. There ought to be a place in the penitentiary for such colossal, monumental liars.

Jerry Simpson's standing with the Alliance cannot be ruined by any story to the effect that he wears silk stockings told by a man who claims to have gone in swimming with him. Jerry Simpson never went in swimming in his life. He belongs to that large class of fanatics who believe that water was made to drink.—Oakland Times.

A man in Boston who was brought up at the police court for drunkenness did not escape a fine, though as it was his first offense within a year he could not have been punished under the new Massachusetts law. The justice fined him for snoring. The snores which he poured forth from the doorway into which he sank down for a drunken slumber startled the neighborhood and even attracted the attention of the policeman who arrested him.

There were doubtless hundreds of brave and locally distinguished men in the Grand Army parade at Detroit the other day, but scarcely a General of national reputation is mentioned in the reports. The reason is that nearly all the famous corps and army commanders are dead. Many of those who are left did their full duty as bravely as the most honored, and some rendered distinguished service, but few were high enough in rank during the war to give them national fame.

As time goes on, the interest increases over the Ohio election. The Republicans have got decidedly the best of the field so far as the tariff is concerned; the Democrats have decidedly the best, so far as the silver question is concerned, because they have a good ringing plank in their platform favoring silver, and if the politicians of the Democratic side are bright enough to state the true significance of silver in the legislation of the country now, they will have a great advantage. The only trouble is the people know that their chiefs, every one almost, are opposed to free silver coinage, and that the plank was put in as a catch word. Still, two or three eminent speakers on the stump in Ohio to explain to the people the real bearing which silver legislation has at this moment on the country would change many a vote. They have one such man in General Warner. They ought to be smart enough to get a good many more.—Salt Lake Tribune.
